Unlike his wife, his family, and his friends, Billy Dodge is alive. Profine, an international pharmaceutical and defense conglomerate, has cured him of an infection that has ravaged the Earth for over a decade. Life isn't easy for former infected, however, and despite Profine's help Billy is struggling to cope in a less than welcoming world. When Billy and a friend are blamed for an unfortunate death, things only become more difficult, and Billy finds himself at the center of a global crisis. As Billy wrestles with his inner demons and the strife around him, society struggles with an important question: are formers human, and should they be allowed to live?

Editorial Reviews

From Kirkus Reviews

"Extraordinary and with a foreboding atmosphere that's grim but never dreary."

From Foreword Clarion Reviews

"Suffused with the dark melancholy of a dystopian future, yet bright with the promise of possibility, this novel affirms Stueve's position as an author to watch in this genre."
